

Sergeant at Arms for the Pennsylvania House of Representatives

According to Votes and Proceedings of the House of Representatives of the Province of Pennsylvania, May 28, 1712, “Ordered, That the Speaker...apply to the Governor and request him to appoint an Officer in the Nature of a Sergeant at Arms, to observe and obey the Commands of this House.” This was the first mention of the Sergeant at Arms in the history of the Pennsylvania General Assembly.

Today, the Sergeants at Arms’ main duty is to police the Hall of the House and those areas used and maintained by the House and its Members. When the House is in session, they maintain order and decorum on the House floor.

Some of the responsibilities of the Sergeant at Arms have changed over the years. Throughout the 18th and 19th centuries, not only did the Sergeants at Arms act as security for the House, the department also maintained the House Bill File Room where they would print bills and deliver them to the Members’ desks. They would also make sure there were enough resolutions, calendars, histories, and journals for distribution to each Member.

Between 1943 and 1979, the name of the Chief Sergeant at Arms is not known. The House Journals do not provide names of many of the regular employees of the House. During this same time, the position changed from an appointed one, to that of a hired employee of the House.

In 1999, the department became the “Office of Security and Safety,” and the Chief Sergeant at Arms served as the director. Each caucus had its own set of security members with a Chief, who would report to the director of Security and Safety. In 2021, the department reverted back to the “House Sergeant at Arms.”
